Stranding of the Whaleship Speedwell.

COAST OF LOWER CALIFORNIA, Feb. 6, 1861. EDITOR OF THE HERALD :- I take the liberty to send you an account of the stranding of the ship Speed-, of Fairhaven, on the night of Feb. 1st, in Scam-

I entered the Lagoon for the purpose of whaling, and it being about done for the season, I started on the morning of February 1st, to work down to the bar, with a fair tide; at 11 A, M., the flood tide made, and I anchored in five fathoms of water; at 6 P. M., wind freshened; reared chain to 65 fathoms; at 7 P. M., felt a shock, but supposed it to be the chain rumbling across the fore-foot; not apprehending any danger, set the watch for the night; at 10 o'clock, P. M., the officer of the deck came below, and reported the ship sinking; called all hands, and started the pumps, and also sent for assistance from the ship Sharon and barques Cynthia and Martha; we then ommenced bailing from all three hatchways, but found the water gaining fast; at 11 P. M., two feet of water between decks; at 12 midnight gave up pumping and bailing, as the water had gained on us two feet the last hour; we then commenced to strip the ship, and also sent hands to sound about the vessel; found 5 fathems all around, with the exception of a small ledge of rocks under the stern, on which the ship had grounded; it being falling water at the time, a spur of the rock went through her bottom somewhere abreast of the mizzen-mast; we then endeavored, with the assistance of the other ship's crews, to heave the ship off but could not start her as the

I now found myself under peculiar circumstances; no water of my own, and none to be had but from people, and they just leaving the Lagoon for other whaling grounds. My cargo consisted of 1,500 bar-

The bar at the entrance of the Lagoon is a dangerous one. No master, with his ship drawing more than eleven feet of water, would be willing to attempt its passage. The masters there were fearful of taking my oil, in addition to their own catchings, without compensation altogether disproportionate to the actual value of the ship and cargo.

Under these circumstances, I concluded to sell the vessel and cargo to the highest bidder, for the benefit of whom it might concern. On the 6th, the masters of six ships being present the ship and cargo were sold to Capts.
